Zachary Zahn is a member of Foley & Lardner LLP's Energy Sector and focuses his practice on energy litigation and bankruptcy/reorganization. He began at Foley as a summer associate, where he worked on various litigation matters in the Dallas office.

Zachary leverages his advocacy skills to represent clients in a wide range of legal matters. His experience at Foley includes representing clients in various business litigation disputes in oil and gas, solar, construction, and corporate governance-related matters, as well as trust and estate disputes, commercial arbitrations, and settlement negotiations. Zachary's keen understanding of complex legal issues, coupled with a strategic approach, results in favorable outcomes for clients.

Prior to law school, Zachary worked as a Petroleum Landman for an upstream oil and gas company where he gained extensive knowledge of the industry and was responsible for assembling a 10,000-acre position in Ward County, Texas. Although his experience is primarily in the Permian Basin, he is knowledgeable in other prominent areas, including the Anadarko, Powder River, and DJ basins. Zachary continues to expand his knowledge into areas such as wind, solar, and other forms of renewable energy. His prior experience allows him to provide unique services, offering superior legal representation that is balanced with an understanding of his client's internal needs.
